In 2007, the legislature adopted RSA 41:11-d, authorizing municipalities, including village districts, to adopt regulations to restrict residential lawn watering. The statute allows municipalities to restrict residential lawn watering within its political boundaries if administrative agencies of the state or federal government declare a drought condition for that region of the state. Lawn watering restrictions may be established for residential homes on private wells, as well as for residential homes obtaining water from a public water system within the municipality’s political boundaries. (Per RSA 38:26, municipalities and village districts who manage public water systems have broader authority to limit customer water use. See “Implementing Water Use Restrictions for Water Systems Owned or Operated by Municipalities or Village Districts”.)

The legislation was adopted because of experiences during the 2001-2003 drought when municipalities and the state found there was no clear process to curtail residential lawn watering, even in neighborhoods where private residential wells were dewatered. During the drought, homeowners with dewatered or dry wells spent thousands of dollars to replace or deepen wells and experienced long waits due to the increased demand for water well contractor services. Many homeowners resorted to cross-connecting their home plumbing system via a garden hose to a neighbor’s home or illegally dumping water hauled to their property into their dewatered well, both of which can result in contamination issues.

The steps to adopting a lawn water restriction pursuant to RSA 41:11-d include:

- Verify that a state or federal government agency has declared a drought for the region. NOAA and the USDA are federal agencies which manage the U.S. Drought Monitor and NHDES provides regional input as necessary; therefore, the easiest way to determine if a drought has been declared in your area is to go to the U.S. Drought Monitor at http://droughtmonitor.unl.edu/ and zoom into New Hampshire. If the municipality is within an area of moderate to exceptional drought, then a lawn watering restriction may be adopted.

- The governing body drafts the regulation specifying how, where, when, and to what extent the lawn watering restrictions apply and what the penalty for violating the restriction will be. The governing body may enforce the lawn watering restrictions by imposing fines in accordance with RSA 625:9 and RSA 651:2. See model regulation, below.
The regulations or a summary of the regulations indicating where the full text of the regulation can be viewed is posted in a paper of general circulation in the municipality and in at least two public places. After three full calendar days after posting, not including the day of posting, the regulation may be implemented. (Ex. If the regulation is posted on Tuesday, it cannot be implemented until Saturday.)
