A recent injury prevents me from submitting this comment in the proper formal context so I must ask you to carry it forward for me.

The rules on temporary seasonal docks include the requirement that such docks on rivers must be parallel to the shore; The following exception should be inserted

Exception: Temporary seasonal docks perpendicular to the shore may be emplaced in the lake-like headpond on the Lower Merrimack River and the several headponds on the Connecticut River where the waters are at least 300' wide and flows slow enough to minimize the danger of docks becoming hazards to navigation."
